DEDICATION

This book is sincerely dedicated to the retiring teachers, Mr. Fowler, Mr. Mysak, Mr. Tarlton, and Mr. Welsh.

These gentlemen between them represent over half a century of teaching at Ross Sheppard. They have seen this school grow and mature; their contribution to this growth has been a major one. Their retirement will be a loss to the school and they will be missed by both students and staff.

The Principal's Message

What Use Is Education?

One of the most frightening things in our world is ignorance; the ignorance that consists in not knowing that there are better things, better ways of doing things, and a social responsibility to try to see, and try to do these better things.

We cannot estimate with any certainty what changes may be brought about in our lifetime; changes due to medical science, interplanetary communications, atomic energy uses, increasing population, exhaustion of certain natural resources such as our gas and oil, conquest of the polar and tropical regions or aggression by despotic powers.

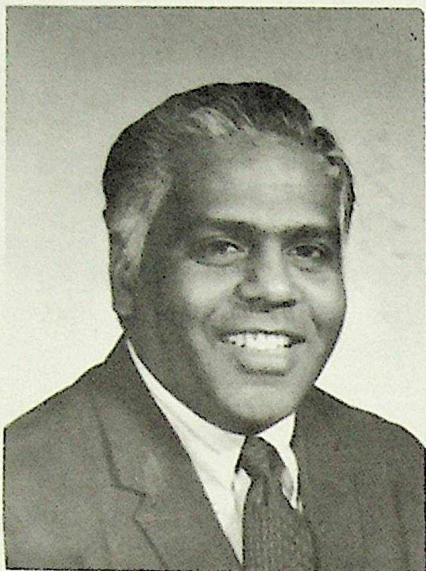

Learning sheer facts is not all of education. The three R's do not constitute education any more than a knife, fork and spoon constitutes a dinner. Education should be useful. We don't mean useful in the sense of making us adept in manipulating gadgets. You all want something better than that. You wish to be fit to perform justly, skillfully, magnanimously and with personal satisfaction all the offices of life.

In seeking that education, be imaginative. The first twelve to fifteen years of your life were its romantic stage. When you looked through a telescope to study the stars, you saw not lumps of matter floating in space, but the glory of the sky. In secondary school you pass through the age of precision. You learn things correctly, exactly and completely, because these things form the bank account on which you will be drawing throughout your life. After secondary school you enter the period of generalization. You will begin to apply what you have learned, transferring particularities of knowledge to the problems of general living. As one peak is climbed, the farther ranges will appear on the horizon, beckoning you. You cannot climb them until you reach them, but they are there, eternally luring you.

Don't expect — and don't desire — that education shall be poured into you. You will see more interesting and useful things when you look for them yourself. You can't profit by accepting facts without questioning, by accepting words instead of trying to understand things. You need to explore the many sides there may be to a question. If you walk around the opinion of a famous man, questioning it then embrace it, the opinion is no longer his, but yours. It is principles, and not mere data, we need if we are to find our way through the mazes of tomorrow.

You need to pay more attention to the art of communicating ideas. There is not much prospect for advancement in commercial firms unless you can express your thoughts competently. You cannot buy or sell, give instructions to subordinates, make a report, win friends or influence people, unless you can say clearly and appealingly what is in your mind to say. Communication is a valuable tool. Often it is a lack of accurate communication which leads to misunderstanding and conflict between persons and even nations. Precise, clear, definition of one's terms can be a bridge for mutual understanding.

There are difficult things that must be done. Education should prepare us to face difficulties, to persevere and to work conscientiously. It includes the habit of cheerfully undertaking imposed tasks and carrying them through to completion. No one can pack enough into his mind during school-days to last a lifetime. What you learn in school is something to which you must add year by year. To get the greatest value from education, set up for yourself an habitual vision of greatness. Your pursuit of education will lead you into something that is not easy, but the expense of thought and energy, the satisfaction of accomplishment, the quest for the significant, gives meaning to life. Do not be content with half measures. "The good is the enemy of the best".

REG DAY

Mr. Chairman, Madame President, Fellow Members of the Senior Class, Ladies and Gentlemen.

Tonight we are gathered together for the last time as students at Ross Sheppard. It is a time of mixed emotions as we recall, on the one hand, the good times we have enjoyed in high school, while on the other, the future looms large and bright, full of our hopes and dreams. Unfortunately these thoughts of the future often take priority in our minds and we tend to forget all that Ross Sheppard has given us.

The word education has a broad meaning, including the development of knowledge, skills and character. We, as students of Ross Sheppard, have been fortunate enough to experience many of these facets for ourselves.

Academically, Ross Sheppard is a school noted for its excellent teaching staff and high academic standards. In this environment we have spent almost 3,000 hours in the classroom, studying texts and conducting experiments. As a result we have learned many things, ranging from the process for computing square roots to Locke's view of human nature. Yet, most important of all, we have learned to think for ourselves and to have confidence in our ability to do so. As our weary and often times teachers will testify, we did not accomplish this alone; therefore I would like to take this opportunity to thank the staff of Ross Sheppard on behalf of the Senior Class of 1972.

The classroom setting is only one form of the education which Ross Sheppard has provided for us all. The athletics program has given many of us the opportunity to participate in either the inter-school or extra-mural programs. While participating in these various sports we have experienced the loyalties and friendships which result from being a team member. We have learned of the elation which comes with victory; and yet, we shall never forget the discouragement which comes with defeat. Through these athletic endeavours, we have come to realize some of our personal talents and handicaps which will enable us to enter into the adult society a little better prepared. Indeed athletics have been a very important part of our education during our stay here.

Another important aspect of our education at Ross Shep has come from the Students' Union and its extensive club's program. The Union has allowed us to experience for ourselves the running of a government and to realize the numerous problems it may encounter. Clubs have enabled individuals to pursue their personal interests to a greater degree than would normally be possible. These two activities, the Students' Union and the clubs, have enabled us to obtain experience which will be valuable to us in the future.

However, our education has not stopped with the organized activities here at Ross Sheppard. For the past three years we have been surrounded by close to 2,000 students, each one an individual. In this situation we have learned to respect each others individuality and to treat others as we wish to be treated ourselves. It is these relationships with each other that have taught us more meaningful lessons than any textbook ever could no matter how long we studied. At the same time our self-respect has come to mean more than just a word to us; it now signifies something which is truly ours and not to be taken lightly. Along with this has come the realization of the necessity for cooperation, although not agreement, amongst people. Something which I hope we will all remember as we grow older.

So for this evening, I have spoken only of the past but it is the future which concerns the members of the Senior Class assembled here. No longer are we children to be seen and not heard, but adults who must try their best to remain rational in what often appears to be an irrational world. In accepting this responsibility, we should strive to continue improving ourselves and our environment for the good of all mankind. But, at the same time we should never allow ourselves to lose sight of the fact that personal happiness and satisfaction are a person's most treasured possession.

In conclusion, I would just like to thank everyone at Ross Sheppard for giving me three tremendously enjoyable years. I hope that each and every one of you achieves your personal goal in life, and with it the happiness that you deserve.

Have a great weekend.

Good Night.

Mr. Chairman, Madame President, Fellow Grads, Honored Guests.

CLASS HISTORY

As Class Historian it is my duty to relate to you the "Saga of the Class of '72". It is the strange tale of how, in the period of three short years, 600 enthusiastic, clean-cut junior high graduates, transformed themselves into this motely degenerate crew seated before us now. Yes, in each one of these students here tonight, we can find several of the unmistakable traits that make up the average members of the Ross Sheppard Graduating Class of 1972. He or she is devilishly good looking, the life of the party, sly as a fox, a credit to society, and scared to death of Miss Staples. Yes, honored guests, they are a strange bunch, and this is their story.

I recall with great pride that this class was the last class to have endured a full week of frosh "hazing". Mr. Fowler's speech on the subject on the first day of school left us ill prepared for the displays of terror and sadism planned for us by those wicked sophomores.

One by one we were picked off, our numbers dwindling rapidly, prey to vengeful sophomores, scowling administrators, and an endless maze of hallways where lowly frosh could become hopelessly lost for days.

As frosh, we were called upon to perform acts which often resulted in a tremendous loss of dignity. Everywhere our classmates could be found: eating garlic, sitting on blocks of ice till they couldn't move their legs, greasing their hair back like heroes out of the fifties, kissing their lips off with new brides or lockers, and doing push-ups in a manner which good taste does not allow me to further extrapolate.

Grade ten was known as the Year of Apathy. School spirit had as much power and drive as one of Don Bell's speeches. It was also a year to learn. The big lesson was don't skip and get caught. In a series of purges reminiscent of the late Joseph Stalin, Miss Staples cracked down on us. We were hastily introduced to the concept of misconduct forms and formal warnings. How well we all remember waiting outside her office with visions of the Gestapo and the Inquisition dancing in our heads.

Later in the year we witnessed our first and last Western Day. Overnight the school had changed into a Wild West show complete with bloodthirsty Indians and swaggering, or should I say staggering, cowboys. Frosh were startled at the animal-like capacities of Darcy Bowler as he ate his way to immortality in the pancake-eating contest. Later in the day came everyone's perennial favorite; the mass orgy of maturity and propriety known as the "Fairy Dance".

The year came to an end and we were released to wreak havoc for two months before coming back as big shot sophomores.

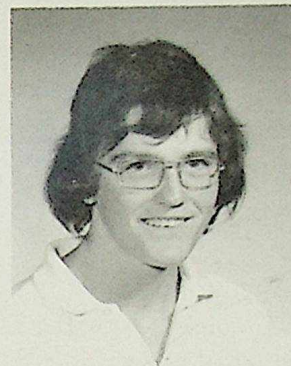

Grade eleven began with hundreds of grizzled sophomores anxious to seek revenge for the atrocities committed against them the previous year. Then it happened. In one of his typically electrifying oratories, Mr. Fowler announced that instead of one week of frosh, there would be only a half day! Cries of frustration and indignation resounded throughout the school. We had been robbed of the privilege to do unto others that which had been done unto us.

In grade eleven there was a rebirth of school spirit. Fans rediscovered football games and they weren't disappointed. There were parties before the games, after the games, and even at half-time. The fans were a rowdy bunch: wildly enthusiastic and ever eager to roll a helpless comrade down the bleachers. With support like this the junior and senior teams couldn't help but win the city championships.

The last half of the year was probably the most eventful period of time in high school. Basketball was big in grade eleven. The mighty Thunderbirds crushed all opposition and finished number one in the league. The story was much the same in the play-offs, but in the city finals, we took pity on Johnny Bright and his six-year men and let them squeak by to victory.

We did, however, win a berth in the Provincials. Dozens of loyal Shep supporters swooped down on an unsuspecting Calgary and took it by storm. Setting up their headquarters in the Crossroads Motel, Sheppites earned a reputation of being a wild uncontrollable mob at the games. These same Shep fans continued to hold their banner high in the greatest display of parting and carousing south of Red Deer. Calgarians still shudder at the mere mention of the word "Thunderbird".

Gamewise, even though our T-Birds made it to the final, Johnny Bright and the old men of Jasper Place won one more game before retiring to a home for aged, decrepid basketball players.

Grade eleven gave birth to Tumbleweed Day but its name was changed to curtail the extra-curricular activities of several over-exuberant cowboys.

This was the year of the Great Door Robbery. In a display of sheer bravado, a couple of students disguised as workmen, made off with Miss Staple's door in broad daylight. Fear paralysed the school as the threat of reprisals hung heavy over our heads. However, humor was the word of the day as Miss Staples graciously accepted her door back and all was well.

Later in the year we were treated to an excellent production of the musical, "The Man of La Mancha," thanks to the fine work of Mr. Agrell-Smith and his drama department.

In late June, after those dreaded final exams, we were given two months rest to prepare for our senior year.

Finally, we came to grade twelve. We had made it to the top. We were suave, sophisticated cool and debonair seniors. Yet we still didn't forget grade ten. Stepping down from our pedestals for one afternoon, we went after those frosh. In a few short, revenge-filled hours, the carnage was complete. The full extent of the damage done to the grade tens will never be known; but to this day they have not fully recovered.

Once again Ross Sheppard was hit by football fever. The fans had kept in shape by long hours of practise during the summer. Our football teams could have gone all the way but they graciously stepped down to preserve the spirit of competition in the league.

In grade twelve we were exposed to national politics. Sheppites were entertained by such political greats as Robert Stanfield, Rael Couette, and David Lewis. Prime Minister Trudeau, fearful of being unable to meet the high standards expected by enlightened Sheppites declined his invitation and sought safety in the Jubilee Auditorium.

This was the year that several valiant Sheppites unselfishly spilled their blood in the cause of the Red Cross. Many of those heroes would not have made it here tonight had it not been for several rounds of Coke and cookies to bring them around.

The surprise of the year came when Don Bell won an election. He was elected Publications Director; thus capping a brilliant political career.

Our senior basketball team, with the CAHPER trophy under its belt, threatened to take the city championships this year. Good play and good-looking cheerleaders made the games exciting. Even though we didn't make the city finals, the T-Birds were universally recognized as the best team in the city.

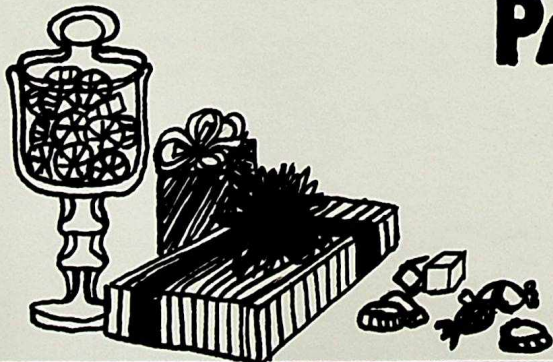

The fact that we weren't involved did not hinder Ross Sheppites doing an excellent job of staging the Provincial Play-offs.

Our senior year has quickly drawn to a close. Three years of high school come to a climax in these graduation exercises. Owing to the hard work of Miss Staples and our teachers, most of us who started out as frosh have made it here tonight. The Graduating Class of '72 has distinguished itself in all aspects of high school life.

We will always remember the events and experiences we have shared in our unique yet proud history in Ross Sheppard.

Good evening and take care.

Thank you.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

MYRON KOCH Former

by JOHN ROSS

JOHN ROSS
Acting

The time has come, for most of the Grade 12 class, to bid a fond farewell to the hallowed halls of Ross Sheppard. For those of us who are not leaving, it is a sorry sight to see them go. They have been a great class, and, to tell the truth, it is really a shame to see them leave. But, as I have said many times before, life goes on.

Being the President at Ross Shep has been a rewarding experience for me, one that will not easily be forgotten. I have met very many extremely wonderful people, and have worked with many of the same. Some of these people were not from Ross Shep, in fact, some were from as far away as Vancouver. All in all, though, I would have to say that most of the best ones I met right here at Shep.

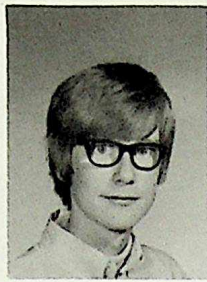

As in the past, I find it customary to congratulate the Grads, and thank them for contributing to not only my year, but to everyone else's. Also, I would like to thank the staff, who worked with all of us in the council, and, lastly, I would like to thank the students of the other two classes, and wish them the best of luck in years to come.

Once again thank you, and best of luck to all.

John Ross, President.

MRS. HEATHER

The Courier Yearbook is one of the largest projects of the school year at Ross Sheppard. It takes a full year to compile and complete, beginning in September with the organization of staff and continuing as a joint effort of all those involved until its completion in June.

Work begins immediately with grade editors sorting and matching almost two thousand pictures with names to complete their grade sections.

Throughout the year the photographers must be on the spot to capture as much of the school action as possible.

Advertising sales begin with the arduous task of soliciting ads in the surrounding district to help defray publishing costs.

Meanwhile, artists and feature editors are hard at work on their various sections so as to totally represent the school year.

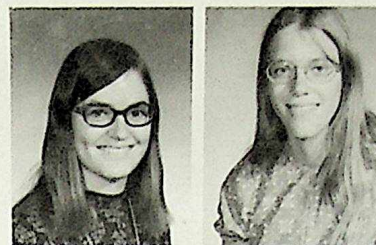

The culmination of these efforts are brought about by our dedicated publisher, Mr. Mathew and his students at Jasper Place Composite.

Our deepest gratitude goes out to our staff advisors, the business education department and all those persons who made our 1972 yearbook a reality. Without your support this could not have been possible.

COURTIER

The Courtroom was silent. Presiding over these proceedings, the eminent Judge Brown (staff advisor).

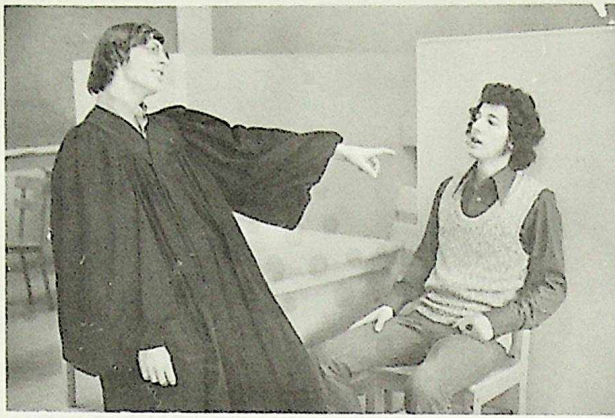

The Crown Prosecutor, the contemptuous Kerry Snyder (assistant editor), began his supercilious cross examination . . .

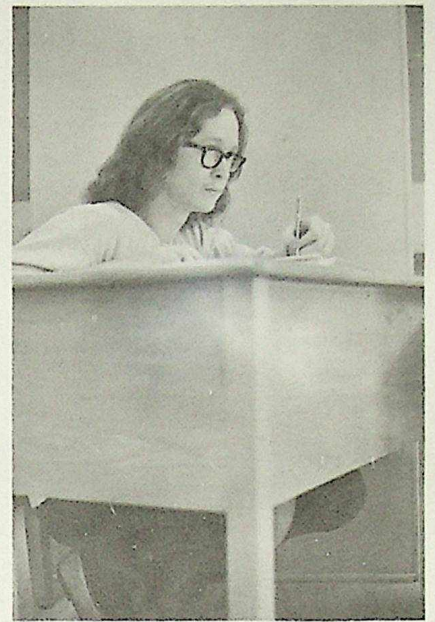

. . . of the main defence witness, also the defendant in the case, Josh Miller (editor). The Crown speaks: "Is it not true that you have polluted your reader's minds with calumniations, corruption, degradation, vulgarity, pornography, and other neat stuff, against exhortation of your assistant editor?"

"Objections" Vociferated the Defense attorney, Miles Goldstick (photographer), "Prosecution is badgering the witness!" Judge Brown sustained, and asked the Prosecution to rephrase the question.

"Did you or did you not promulgate a, to put it lightly 'controversial' paper this year?"
 "Your $/%±##$$ rights I did!" replied the defendant intrepidly.

"Censor that $/%±#!$ remark!" shouted the judge, and the court stenographer, Jim Keating (artwork), complied meekly.

Don Bell (publications board), chief witness for the prosecution, seemed to end all hope for Miller when he delivered a scintillating oratory condemning the defendants journalistic responsibility.

The jury, comprising of Jay Drager (photographer), Bruce Farough (artwork), and Ken Spillet (writer) delivered their verdict. "Guilty!" they shouted.

The sentence handed down was harsh: "The defendant is sentenced to transcribe and type all of Don Bell's political speeches to date." Having achieved justice, the staff lived happily ever after . . .

ATHLETIC REVIEW

Besides the Educational side of Ross Sheppard we also have the athletic part. For a lot of students, athletics played an important role in their lives this year. Many had played on teams before; many had not. Not only did we have inter school teams but intramurals as well. These students learned what it's like to win and lose, discipline, sportsmanship.

Although the chant of we're number one was not heard this year, I feel that everybody on all the teams learned many things. Many of our teams finished in the semi finals and some did not, but the main thing is they enjoyed it and in amateur sport that's what counts.

Because of these students who participated in all the sports, I would like to give them a big thank you and hope that they continue in their respective sports.

Thank you.

Ted Lelacheur, Athletic Division Director.

SCHOOL ACTIVITIES

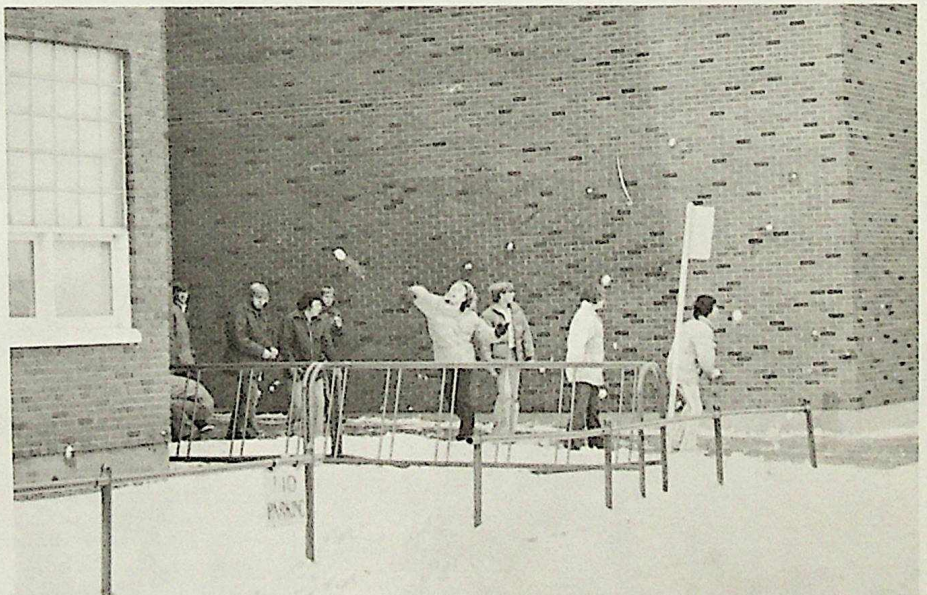

The beginning of the 71-72 school year started with Shep's annual Frosh Day. On September 4 at 8:30 Shep was out in full force dancing to the sound of South bound Freeway. Manna played at the cabaret in October. November brought around the annual Sadie Hawkins Dance and many girls were out to get their favorite man.

CHED'S Santos Anonymous Sock Hop was held in December The United Agar Store playing for the noon hour. Tumbleweed Day, January 21 brought out all the cowboys, cowgirls and Indians from Shep. The colorful wing decorations added much to the atmosphere. A general store, a fort and a train station were just some of the exciting wings activities like chuckwagon races, and the pony express were held in the main gym at noon. A football throw, sponge throw, raffle and a bar were some of the features of our penny carnival in the afternoon held in the small gym.

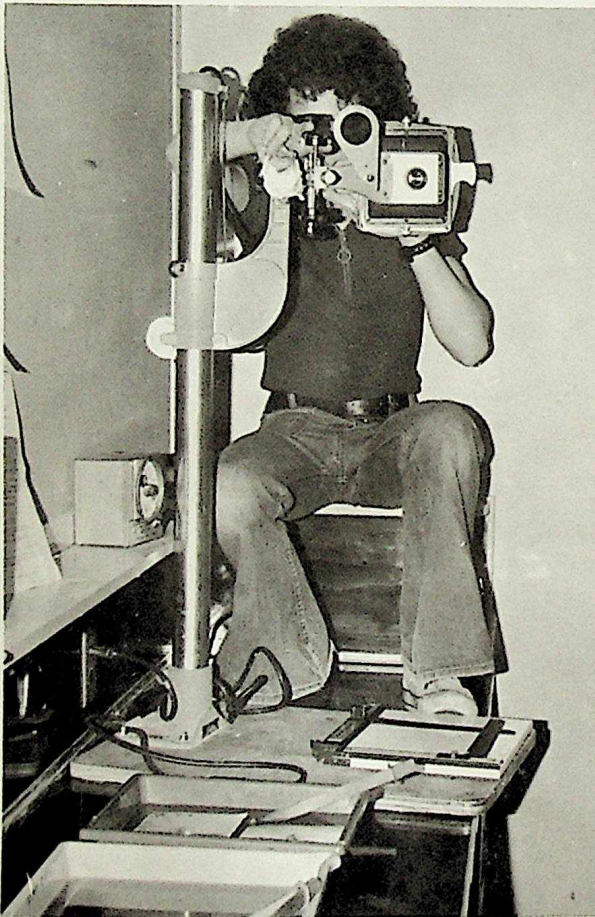

April 28 was Shep's Spring Dance with Whitemud playing from 8:00 to 11:30. Although we didn't have many activities this year, the year was very successful and everyone who attended had a good time.

"THE APPRENTICE"

— J Van de Maat

The tall man leaned on the desk, his body resembling a brown-tipped toothpick. However, from his voice and manner, it could have been presumed that he had the physique of a professional athlete.

His brown eyes studied a diagram of the skeletal structure of a crayfish at the opposite end of the classroom. He seemed to be unconsciously flinching from the small boy who stood militarily at attention in front of him.

"Well, Tommy, ", said Mr. Willis sharply, "you probably know why I called you here." He gave the boy an expectant glance.

"I suppose so, sir."

Satisfied, the teacher went on briskly, "I'm sorry about it but you weren't the first to submit the entry. Charles Monteham gave the model and the results of his experiments to me a whole day before you did. And in all fairness . . ." He shrugged his shoulders.

The boy nodded, his eyes cold and somehow distant.

Almost as though the teacher felt sorry for Tommy he added: "I'm giving you an extension, though. If you can come up with an original project within a week, it will be entered in the fair. Who knows, you might even win the trip to the world science convention." He chuckled inwardly at the thought.

Tommy still stood at attention, making the stand beside him seem to lean by comparison.

"You can go now, Tommy. Good luck."

"It isn't fair. It isn't fair." Tommy muttered to himself as his feet made precise patterns on the grass-covered sidewalk. "I did it first. And he stole it from me. All of it. Every single thing. The only really good idea I ever had and he used it. He's a brain: he could have thought of something himself but no, that was too hard, mine was just sitting there, like a plump pigeon."

It was actually no surprise. For Charles had been stealing ideas from everyone ever since he was born. Perhaps it came of similar-minded parents or just from being first in Mental Contact, Reasoning, Deduction and taking advanced courses at the Institute. Although Tommy didn't believe the rumors that said Charles was excellent material for a spy and not a scientist, he had to acknowledge the reasoning that was behind it.

Suddenly, he became aware of the alien shapes in his mind.

"Get out, Charles. Haven't you taken enough?"

"Went to see the teacher, eh? Such a good boy. Nothing's ever your fault. Poor, poor baby."

"Charles, get out before I shut you out."

"Oh, and now you're a superman with a superbrain. Where have you being hiding your light all these years?"

"Why did you come, Charles? Wasn't my project good enough for you?"

"Of course, it wasn't as good as I wanted, but — I just have to take what I can get."

"Do you want my sympathy?"

"I can live without your sympathy, stupid. I just want to know what you intend to do about making a new project."

"Worried, aren't you? I'm the one with the little mind, remember? You got my project and I'm not making another one for you to steal!"

"I'm beginning to wonder if you could stop me."

Abruptly he slipped out, leaving Tommy to trudge home with his own thoughts.

There was no one else in the house. Wednesday was just another day in the working week for Tommy's father, a sergeant in the army. Tommy's stepmother had left a long time ago for better worlds.

After tidying up the house a little, Tommy went to his bedroom, sat on the edge of his bed and began to transmit, his whole body seeming to be somewhere else.

"How was school today, Tommy?" The insignificant man looked at his son with interest.

"Fine, sir."

"Did you do your homework?"

"Yes, sir."

"Finish your broadcast?"

"Yes, sir. And I sent all the way home and talked to Grandfather. He was so happy to talk with me that he said I was the best Apprentice that anyone ever had."

"Now, Tommy, your grandfather is blind in some ways. Did you satisfy Charles with the project?"

"Yes, sir. He checked me out first but I did what you told me to: pretend to be just an ordinary little boy."

"That's very good, son. One more genius beginning to spoil."

"Sir . . ."

"Yes."

"Why isn't everyone like us? Charles has it a little, but he doesn't use it right. Why doesn't he?"

"It comes of having a clear mind and an inquisitive one. Someone to help you who has gone through the training himself. But it all comes down to a matter of breeding: if nothing good has gone before, nothing good can follow. If the few of us who are left can do some selective weeding, perhaps," he said in an undertone, "we won't ever have to be lonely again. Eat you supper, son."

"Yes, sir." As he picked up his knife and fork, Tommy wondered at the flicker of desparate loneliness that had appeared suddenly in his father's eyes.

THIRD HONORABLE MENTION

THE WISEMAN

— Kerry Pringle

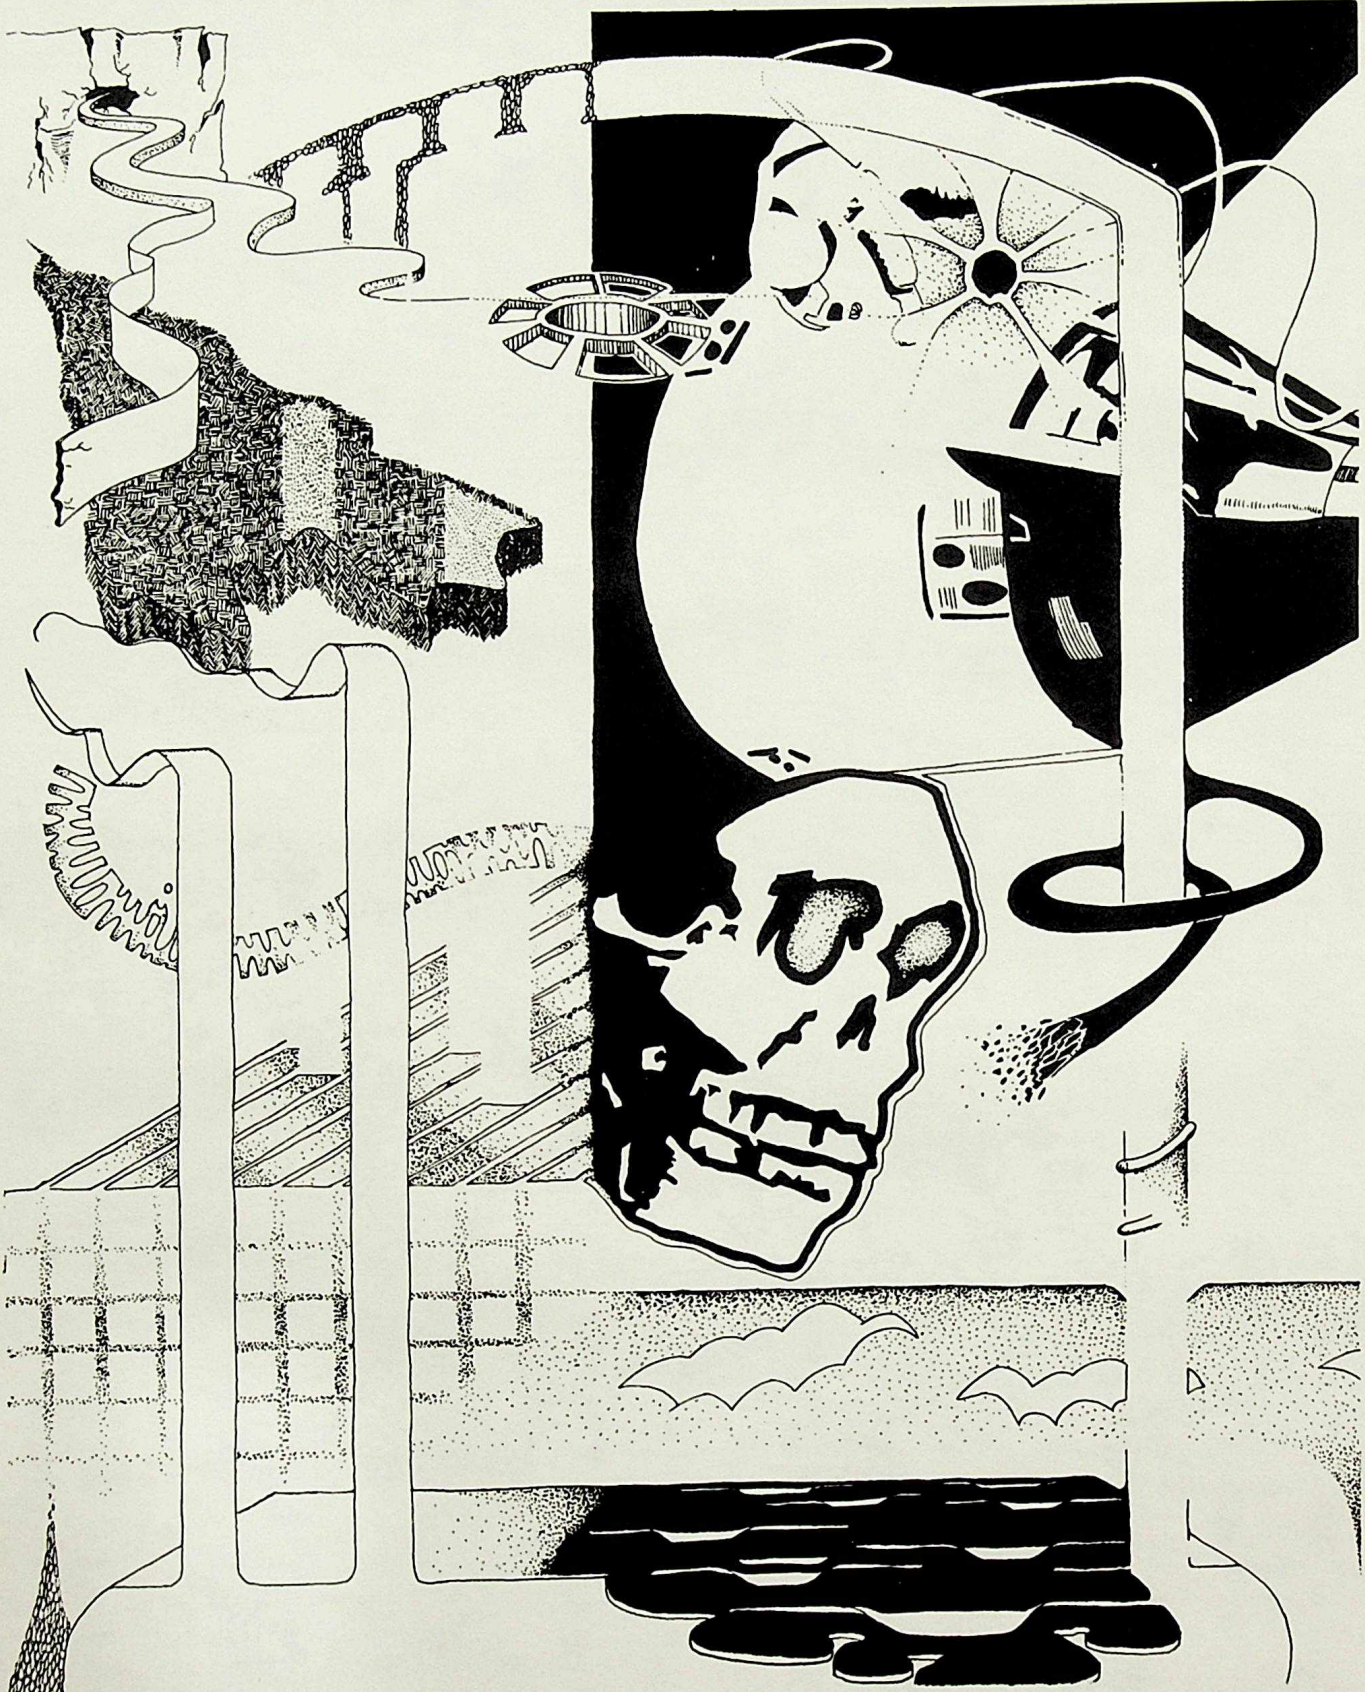

You ask me what is beauty?
And I could only answer,
"Life and Love and Freedom;
The motions of the dancer."

You ask me what of tomorrow?
And I spoke to you of a day
When all our pains will bear their fruit,
As children learn only to play.

You ask me what of love?
And I smiled down on you.
"Find it, young girl," I said,
"And you will never feel blue".

SOUTHERN VENOM

— Kerry Pringle

The sun shone dimly, fighting its way through the soupy mists that hung over Birmingham like a clammy blanket. On the north side, the aluminum plants were enshrouded in their own smoke and wastes which trailed gently to the west. A sea of cars surrounded these buildings; dusty Alabama license plates on every one. Each night they were driven five miles to the housing development in the northwest corner where the workers were forced to live.

Ragged newspaper pages and discarded beer cans populated the street gutters, while dented garbage barrels bred flies in any nook available. A heavy, sulfurous stench mingled with the sweet odor of fermenting fruit. The townhouse apartments lining every street were new and modern, but cried out their abuse with peeling paint, shaggy lawns, and a coat of dirt. Every group was the same pale red and white combination; row on row, like waves crashing on a beach.

There was very little wind, and apart from the smog, there weren't any clouds in the azure sky. The temperature was pleasantly warm, but slowly getting hot as the fuzzy disk rose. Shade was a welcome commodity, especially when it came from a real, live tree, and Ben Lanton wasn't missing a second of it. He lay with his back against the trunk, absorbing the coolness; getting ready for the blistering day ahead. School had ended three weeks ago, and Ben felt good about passing into grade twelve.

A remarkable boy, he felt he was to be something special, and toyed with the thought often. From every magazine he could get, Ben had sent away for the "Anybody Can Be A Success" booklets; reading them on weekends. His father encouraged him; told him how he could make it if he tried, and how it was if he failed. In sharp contrast to his mother scorned Ben; told him how useless it would be without money, or big influential friends.

But Ben didn't listen to her; she was always bitching; usually out dad and his drinking, or his lousy job which she detested violently.

In school Ben had decided to go all out to make a name for himself, determined somebody would notice and take him out of the filthy misery of Birmingham. The football team of George C. Scott High was his perfect release valve, and Ben made it into an obsession. He had his eye on the quarterbacking spot, but finally settled in as a loose end, which proved a real boon for an agile sprinter with dextrous hands. From the start he made an impression; the whole school seemed to applaud his every action. Five times he had run the length of the field for a touchdown, and once, when the South Side Raiders had grabbed an interception, he ran back from deep field for the tackle.

During school classes, Ben studied, and racked his brains for hours, working like a tireless robot. He stood at the top of his classes in Chemistry, Physics, and Math; though in French and the English courses he took his marks were lower. Halfway through the year he made friends with Mike Zolsti, the editor of the school's small newspaper that sold only when Ben was on the front page. Their friendship grew, and soon Mike was the best pal Ben had.

At the end of the year Ben received an award for his great ability on the football field, and an academic citation as well. A smash party was thrown, with Ben and Terry Saunders, the quarterback, as the centre of attraction. It died out at three o'clock Saturday morning; the first day of summer vacation, and with it went Ben Kanton.

It seemed nobody was interested in a last year's hero, at least not around Birmingham. But what chipped away at the back of his mind was that Terry Saunders was still living on his glory, and rumor had it the big professionals were interested. Ben pushed the thought from his mind; it wasn't important, Terry just got a lucky break. Besides, it was too good a day to screw up with thoughts like that. To top it off, Ben was to go have an interview for a construction job which could materialize into an income for the summer.

With a sorrowful sigh, Ben lifted himself up and gave himself a large stretch; the drab yellow and gray bus was coming down toward the park. It stopped with a long squeak, opened its doors, and a dozen kids jumped out and ran off. Paying his quarter, he walked slowly back, feeling a couple pairs of eyes surveying his every move. Finding an empty seat near the rear, he dropped down and sidled over to the window to watch the mid-morning traffic swish by. Soon the anonymous townhouses swung into view, and Ben got off the bus at his corner.

The screen door was already open; the little electric fan mumbling to itself; pulling in the cooler outdoor air. His mother was baking. The fierce heat of the stove was already crowding into the living room and upstairs. That was life, thought Ben, as he scampered off to his room to change to some good clothes.

The room was silent. There was nobody in it but Ben, which made him nervous. He had been sitting for half an hour, studying the antique book case on the far wall, and the neat, antique desk in front of him with its padded swivel chair. Since no other chair had been provided, Ben had finally dared put himself in the swivel chair, hoping to jump out before anyone entered.

Eventually a door opened; Ben shot up and vaulted the desk in one graceful spring. It was a small, balding man with thick glasses in dark frames, and he appeared to be in a harassed mood. Without a word he settled down into the chair and opened a drawer in the desk, pulling out a piece of paper. With a monotonix drone he began to cross-examine Ben, not bothering to look up. When he finally did, his eyes grew, and he sent an audible gasp through the air, but quickly recovered. A small notation was made in an upper corner of the form. The man put down his pen, then told Ben that was all he needed to know at the moment. Ben was dazed, and stood with his mouth partially opened. The man hadn't even asked for qualifications; what he'd done before, or anything! With a downtrodden expression Ben turned to leave, but glanced at the paper with a dark "N" in one corner.

Outside, the day was boiling under the sun's harsh glare. Ben strode about aimlessly, trying to figure things out. The morning's beautiful innocence seemed so far away now; all its magical castles and dreams lay in splintered ruin. A terrible sensation came over Ben; he tried to fight it with all the logic and reason he could, but still it came. Walking past a small pre-schoolers park, he turned and went in, flopping down on the grass.

All the trivial sneers in school; all the silences as he walked by; all the stares on buses welled up and burst into his mind. Ben had never let it bother him before; he had too many real friends that said he was O.K. But the insults must have lodged deep down. The little, balding runt had only sparked the tidal wave which now came crashing down, to flood Ben with fiery hatred. Like gigantic monsters, writhing and smoldering, evil ideas clawed their way up to his sanity and shook. It was a new experience; Ben couldn't control it; didn't know how to cope with it. His head hurt; it felt ripped apart. One side was screaming "No, it couldn't be; it's 1972! Things like this don't happen in 1972! For God's sake, man, think!"

But the other half wasn't yelling, it was moving. Slowly it stalked over to the logical half, grabbed it, subdued it, wiped it calmly away. The death grip was efficient; soon logic stopped struggling, and relaxed.

Ben got up, fire gleaming from his eyes, and quietly moved out of the park; out into the dirty whiteness of Birmingham.

FIRST HONORABLE MENTION

If I could be a teddy bear
Life would be so easy
Always wearing a smile
Having fluff for a brain
And a button for a nose
Eyes that can't see
And ears that can't hear
Being placed on a shelf
Or stuck in a closet
No worries or troubles
Life amongst paper dolls
And toy tin soldiers
All wearing plastic smiles.

— Kelly Seagrave

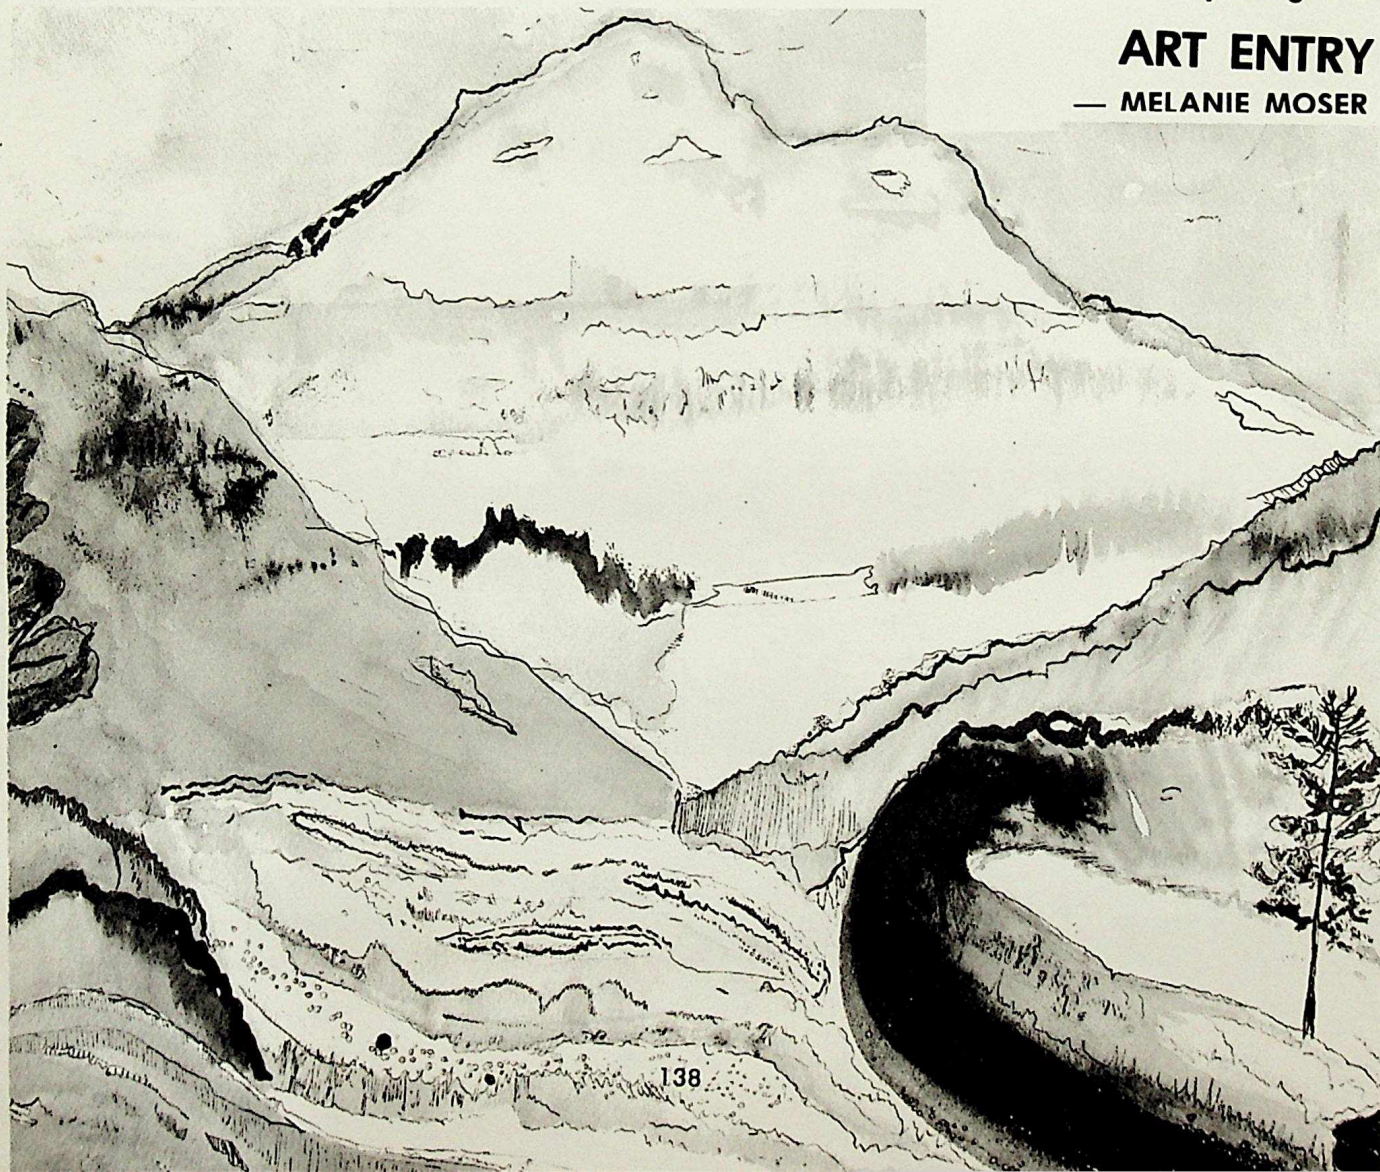

SECOND HONORABLE MENTION

Creeping out
Looking this way
Looking that way
Being so careful
Sun breaks through
Rain fades away
Seeing a face
That isn't sad
Things look brighter
Bumps are smoother
Eyes that were sad
But now look shiny
Scared to laugh
Find it's not so hard
Creeping out
of loneliness

CHILDREN'S LITERATURE

One of the projects of the students in Children's Literature, (an English Depth-Elective course) is the writing and illustrating of an original children's story. The Yearbook is pleased to print the following selection as an example of the splendid writing being done in that course.

— Mrs. Heather

FOOSHIE

BRENDA INKINEN

The South wind swooshed and swirled through the Canadian forests with a happy smile.

When South wind passed over each forest, she sent out one of her breezes to help the trees and the flowers. Whispy was Lucky to get the Laughing Forest.

She chuckled with the wide awake spruce and pine; giggled with the elms and then tickled the poplars until they smiled and woke up.

Fooshie loved Whispy and laughed when she tickled him. He hoped she would be the one to carry him on his travels.

Fooshie was getting ready to go away — he did not know where, but it was to be a place of his own. All his brother and sister poplar puffs were also preparing for this great event. Mrs. Poplar was busy helping her children: Fluff lost a shoe, Cobweb was hunting for a sock, and Frizz and Poof were fighting! Oh, poor Mrs. Poplar, she had her branches full!

Finally, everybody and every thing was ready. Fooshie and all his brothers and sisters climbed upon Whispy's back, and away they blew. The Laughing Forest wished the tiny poplar puffs good-bye and good luck: tears even came to Fooshie's eyes while he waved. But Fooshie's heart was that of an adventurer. Soon he began to dance and sing; laugh and play jokes! Everyone was happy!

Whispy whisked over valleys, mountains, fields and streams. Fooshie saw many things. And so the day passed until the last color of the sunset was swallowed by night. And all fell to sleep except Whispy and Fooshie. For Fooshie did not want to miss a thing! But even then, the Sand-man captured him — That left Whispy whispering to the dawn.

When the sun crept back into the sky, Fooshie rumbled about until everyone was up. The poplar puffs played tag and rumbled and tumble until — oh no! — Fooshie fell off! Down, down, down floated Fooshie — down, down — right to the middle of an unfriendly, mean forest. The trees were gnarled and wrinkled with age, and they moaned and groaned so. They were so close together, Fooshie could not see the sky! He was all alone with these awful trees peering at him! He was so frightened and so-o scared!

Then, Fooshie heard a sound! Buzz-zz-z. What was that? It was Quincy, a big burly bumble bee! Fooshie looked at Quincy; Quincy looked at Fooshie. Quincy offered to help — this made Fooshie feel brave — and Fooshie jumped with joy at his rescue! So Fooshie climbed onto Quincy's back. and they buzzed away.

Quincy flew into another new world for Fooshie. Never again would Fooshie visit that gruesome forest!

Then Fooshie spied a babbling stream, and asked Quincy to drop him off on a leaf in the water. So Fooshie sailed away to seek his fortune. He waved good-bye to Quincy and hoped he would visit him.

Fooshie sailed past a slurping cow, butterflies playing tag and dancing flowers. The sun shone brightly and the sky was deep blue — Fooshie was very happy! He began to sing, laugh and enjoy himself.

Then Fooshie got an idea! It was a wonderful idea! Fooshie glowed with excitement! He asked the cow, the flowers, the butterflies, the frogs and the trees — everyone — and all agreed it was a good idea!

So Fooshie hopped off his ship and did just what he had thought of — he settled by the stream.

And do you know that on warm days you may catch him and Quincy, and maybe, frog having a nice, quiet talk?

CITIZENSHIP AWARD

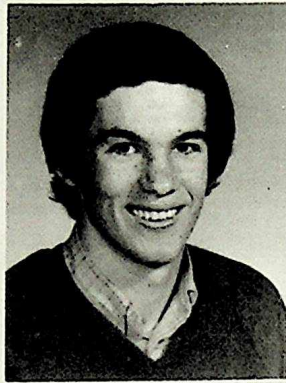

The Citizenship Awards are given to either two or three Grade XII students whose contributions to Ross Sheppard have been most outstanding during the past three years.

The pupils must qualify as strong academic students.

They must have represented this school in interscholastic athletics, or in public performance, or have made a significant contribution to executive work in the Students' Union. Their achievement must have been at a high level of competence.

They must have demonstrated leadership qualities in school sponsored activities. They must have shown good organizing ability, willingness to accept and carry out responsibilities, co-operation, ability to meet deadlines, initiative and maturity of judgment.

They must have shown school spirit by placing the good of the school ahead of personal recognition. The habits and attitudes must be consistent with what one is entitled to expect from the outstanding citizen of Ross Sheppard.
